SOURDOUGHS CALLED TO SEATTLE CONCLAVE

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work

As a Sourdough I am telling the world there will be a reunion of the clan in Seattle beginning next Friday. As is set forth in the announcement of the committee on arrangements of the great gathering, every provision is being made in the Puget Sound city for the happiness and pleasure of the hosts who will mush in by boat, train and airplane to the town which they recall so vividly in the nineties on leaving to seek the gold dust of the North.

A few weeks ago my friend, Earle W. Knight, managing editor of The Alaska Weekly, was my guest on a trip to Heather Farm and naturally he exercised his prerogative of a newspaperman in interviewing me. I must say, Earle, you guessed me right in jotting down:

"John Marchbank's hobbies are thoroughbred horses, placer mining and the welfare of the people of Daly City."

He did compliment me, too, writing that I am a credit to the Sourdough Clan, but that is neither here nor there.

A paragraph right to the point in the "story," illustrated by "snaps" taken by the editor at the "ranch," is one enlarging on his amazement that I can find time to devote to the onerous task of conducting Heather Farm while other interests are clamoring for attention, mining in half a dozen states and in Alaska, for example.

Of interest to the citizens of the United States is the action taken recently by the Canadian government in revaluing its gold. A statement by the government shows a "profit" of approximately $63,000,000 for the treasury of the country to the north of us and of about $10,500,000 for chartered banks by the process of revaluation sanctioned under what is called the exchange fund act.

As in the United States before the new law came into effect gold was valued at $20.67 an ounce and by the magic of the legislation the market value of the yellow metal is roughly $35 an ounce.

Financial circles are wondering as to what use the minister of finance will make of the $63,000,000 "profit" until such time as it is put into an exchange fund. It has been suggested by a number of experts that the minister might issue new currency or he might go into the open market and buy back Dominion of Canada securities, which would have the result of advancing the prices of bonds.

One move has been the use of part of the "profit" in reducing the Bank of Canada's holdings of Dominion securities, with deposits of the Dominion government in the bank increasing. The net result will be the treasury will receive more interest than it did before.

Again there is talk of a free gold mart in this country. Norman C. Nor-

GRAMMAR SCHOOLS TO OPEN MONDAY

The elementary schools of the Jefferson School District will open classes this Monday, August 12 for the fall term.

During vacation the trustees have been busy refitting and painting the various buildings; also, quite a number of desks have been refinished.

Owing to the construction of the new school buildings some changes have been made. The two classes which were in the basement of the Woodrow Wilson School have been moved to two rooms in the Manuel Arts Building and the school board believe that this change will be a great benefit to the children in these classes.

Miss Marjorie Tobias has been appointed principal of the Woodrow School.

HOME TEAM PLAYS AT HIGH SCHOOL FIELD

Next Sunday, August 11, the Daly City Tanforan baseball club will cross bats with the Royce Sports team on the Jefferson High School diamond in Daly City.

The game will start at 12 noon, so as to enable those boys of the home club who so desire to attend the Merchants Association picnic later in the afternoon at Oak Cove Park.

Those fans who witness this contest are assured of a well played game, and it is hoped to finish in time to attend the picnic.

RETURNS HOME

William Amlin, who spent the past six months visiting in Chicago, returned home last Saturday and was a guest, Sunday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Foss of Los Banos avenue. Mr. Amlin formerly made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Foss.

man, who brought suit in which the Supreme Court ruled on the constitutionality of the abrogation of gold clauses in bonds, has made an estimate there is at least one billion dollars remaining in hoarding or outside the country because of the lack of a gold market. He holds that the removal, about a year ago, of restrictions on foreign exchange dealings permitted individuals who desired to hold gold against the possibilities of inflation to purchase all the gold they wanted in the London free gold market. He maintains it is not necessary to enact the bill outlawing gold clause suits before establishing the market, probably in New York, as in the old days.

HEATHER FARM MARES NOW AT THEIR BEST

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Firenze won forty-seven races and, as an old-timer with a truly remarkable memory told me the other day in a fanning bee, her mating with the mighty Salvator up at Rancho del Paso was made the occasion of a widely observed holiday. It was the union of the best strains in the thoroughbred realm by representatives of undoubted speed, stamina and courage. But it was a failure of the most disappointing kind; the theory that great racers should produce great sons and daughters was given a terrific jolt.

The generally accepted explanation for the "flop" of Firenze in the breeding paddock is that she was over-raced and consequently did not have the vitality to transmit to offspring that would make them of some class out on the course. Like every rule, however, there are exceptions to this one. Alice Hawthorn started in 71 races, winning 50½, and still, after being retired and having her first foal at eleven years of age, turned out to be a broodmare of the class of the immortal Pocahontas, Queen Mary and other notables.

My policy at Heather Farm is to use matrons that have not been raced over much or in some cases have never been to the post. Of the twelve sucklings at my nursery more than half are from young mares; even the "old" ones, such as Snooksie Bradley, Mair of Perth's dam, Lady Leighton, and others, are only 14 years old.

Eight of the Heather Farm foals of this year are by my young stallion Xenofol, a thoroughbred of decided individuality and, as is well known, of the best blood lines and of remarkable speed, which he demonstrated in races with Whichone, Gallant Fox and other good ones.

The other day I was glancing over the pedigree of Omaha, the champion three year old, and was struck by the similarity of blood in Omaha's veins and that in my stallion. Xenofol is from the Durbar II mare, Xenita, while Omaha's second dam, Flamette, is also by Durbar II. There is plenty of staying blood in both pedigrees. As will be recalled, Durbar II won the Epsom Derby and was famous both as a racer and as a sire.

One thing that interests me particularly and that I think is a factor in the prowess of both Omaha and Xenofol is that Armenia, dam of Durbar II, is a daughter of Hanover's daughter Urania. It's a familiar story and an oft-told one—that of the influence of the American idol, Hanover, on the making of the highest type of the thoroughbred.

NEW RECORD IS EXPECTED IN LINE FOR STATE FAIR

The new record of having every county in the state represented will be made at the 1935 California State Fair, which opens for ten days on August 31.

Either through official county, or by entries in the educational, livestock, dairy products and other classes, the visitor to the state fair will view the resources of each of the fifty-eight counties.

Thirty counties have already notified Secretary-Manager Charles W. Paine that they will have elaborate exhibits in the big agricultural building and five are already on the ground setting displays in place. Several other counties are expected to swell the list.

Counties who have already entered official exhibits are: Alameda, Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Colusa, Contra Costa, El Dorado, Fresno, Humboldt, Lassen, Los Angeles, Mendocino, Modoc, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Sacramento, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Francisco, San Joaquin, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Solano, Sutter, Tuolumne, Ventura and Yolo.

The heavy increase in school exhibits, especially from southern California, is giving representation to counties which are not taking space in the agricultural building.

Each of the ten states from the Rockies west will also be represented in the exhibitor lists.

WAR IS DECLARED!

The tug of war teams of the Colma Volunteer Fire Department and Marconi Nest No. 1787 of Colma will clash at the picnic to be given at Lovchen Gardens, Colma, Sunday, August 18.

The Colma Volunteer Fire Department team being the Champions of the county, and the Marconi Nest a close second, will certainly make it a hot and exciting battle.

This is going to be one of the biggest picnics of the year at the gardens. Do not miss it. There will be other interesting games and a good time for all.

MERCHANTS OF DALY CITY MAKE FINAL PLANS FOR PICNIC

BOARD OVERRIDES STATE BY VOTING FUNDS FOR NEEDY

Supervisors Pledge Money For Start On Building Of Livestock Pavilion

Although the State Board of Equalization had turned down an application of the San Mateo County Board of Supervisors for permission to make an allowance of $140,000 in special items beyond the 5 per cent limitation of the new Wright Act, the board at a meeting on Monday put the items in the 1935-36 budget of the county. The Wright Act becomes effective next month, so the supervisors decided to take advantage of the opportunity afforded prior to the act going into effect.

The board also voted $50,000 cash from the "unappropriated state redemption fund" to the San Francisco-San Mateo County Livestock Exposition, which the state board had allowed and $10,000 to the Sunnyvale airbase purchase, a debt now five years old, which the state also approved.

A total of $200,000 is then to be added to $46,000 which the 5 per cent limitation law allows, so that expenditures in 1935-36 will be $246,000 over those of 1934-35. Governmental costs will be increased from $921,543.34 last year to $1,167,620.50 by the new items.

Special items to be placed into the budget include:

1. $60,000 for additional hospital expenses.
 2. $50,000 for emergency relief expenses.
 3. $30,000 for old age pensions.
- These items were not approved by the state board of equalization.

COOL SIMPLICITY

PATTERN 9354

The smart girl has one eye on the budget and the other anticipating a rise in temperature—and makes a cool decision to include several summer sports in her wardrobe right now. It took a lot of ingenuity to design that clever yoke-cape-panel in one. It makes sewing so easy, and briefly, that cape is much cooler than a sleeve. Pattern 9354 sports an action pleat back and skirt just to help you "get places." If you find a simple flat neckline becoming, omit the dashing revers (but we like 'em). Very correct for spectator sports, office wear or week-end jaunts. Make it up in washable sport silk or shantung. Try a novel "cork" buckle and buttons.

Pattern 9354 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 yards 36 inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

SYNOPSIS

Following his father's bitter criticism of his idle life, and the withdrawal of financial assistance, Hal Ireland, only son of a wealthy banker, finds himself practically without funds but with the promise of a situation in San Francisco, which city he must reach, from New York, within a definite time limit. He takes passage with a cross-country auto party on a "share expense" basis. With five other members of the party, an attractive girl, Barry Trafford; middle-aged Giles Kerrigan; Sister Anastasia, a nun; and an individual whom he instinctively dislikes, Martin Crack, he starts his journey. Barry's reticence annoys him. To Kerrigan he takes at once, but he is unable to shake off a feeling of uneasiness. He distrusts Crack, although finding his intimacy with Kerrigan ripening, and he makes a little progress with Barry. Through a misunderstanding, at a stopping place, Hal is directed to Barry's room, instead of his own.

Alarm—of a curiously profound and quiet kind—deepened the clarity of her look as she got up, turning one hand against her chest to hide her crumpled handkerchief. Her golden hair was as Hal had hoped: the burnished vigor of it flowed through full, deliberate waves to end in a rich thicket of half-curled, their rioting simply disciplined at the edges of her smoothly modeled cheeks. There was new, mature loveliness in her straight young body—under deep-green satin, fitted to her firm waist, spreading to a full skirt, and tapered above to her straight shoulders.

The splendor of what he saw, without moving his look from the deep alarm of her eyes, seemed to check the running of his blood in that silent moment—like the shadow of shock. And he heard himself say, very gravely: "I'm sorry. She told me this was my room. She must have thought..." It wasn't important enough to finish in the expectant silence between them, round them, full in the room. "It's all right," said Barry, her low voice coming with reluctance.

Something made him say, quietly, respectfully, "I'm sorry you've been crying."

The alarm stayed in her eyes—not a replenished thing, more like a solemn moment of it fixed there over the later business of her erect head. She might not have heard him, except that her voice said hurriedly, "That's all right, too."

They stood looking at each other, and new rounds of silence crept close into the room. She was waiting for him to go. Hal knew he must turn and walk out at the door; and he must do this before the slow, strong force gathering somewhere deep in him showed itself in his enchanted eyes. Before it unlocked his resolution, loosed the warm words that already stirred at his tongue. It was a race between his lagging command to still limbs, that they move, and a hot, headless authority careering forward to take charge of blood and flesh and hurl mind away, like a dried rag, toward the morning.

He made his legs move him. And, slowly, they moved him to her, her averted watching of his eyes unchanged, the carriage of her glowing head fearless. His arms slipped round her, under her own, and as he drew her firm, satin warmth toward him, her hands went up to his shoulders and over them. She made a small sound of weariness; her eyes closed; her lovely head turned so that her lips—warm and soft and sure of grandeur—came under his.

It was probably a long time they stood there close together, without speaking, resting almost as part of each other in the silence that had grown enormous around them in the room. Once Barry took her generous lips slowly away and pressed her golden head to his shoulder; but when he moved his mouth along the faintly fragrant smoothness of her hair, she turned her lips up again—confident, grateful, credulous. Only her eyes, before they closed, were neither confident nor credulous—still held in awe, they were, still near in the fringes of alarm.

In the pregnant hugeness that blotched away the four walls, Hal felt an excitement of silent rushing—not so much that they were being flung upward alone, as that the whole silence that marooned them there was being rushed on through surely gathered speeds toward some explosive, brilliant revelation. And as his will to lose himself in this enormous and imminent beauty flooded toward whole possession of his senses, one stubborn, small agent of reason tried more frantically to make him do what he had to do. Get out, get out, get out: it came around across his attention again and again, fainter and fainter, until suddenly it took ridiculous command and his hands went to Barry's straight, firm shoulders.

She looked up at once, and the alarm was conquered in her courageous eyes. Quietly and as if to herself, she said, "You're pretending. And I am. I'm not in love with you. I'm not falling in love with you."

She took a step backward, and his hands dropped down to hold hers.

He knew that command of his reason was for a moment only; the sudden calm on him now was not to be trusted, not to be found again if he let his tongue, his blood, his whole spirit run out in their hot importunities.

Their hands slipped apart. He saw the reluctance of that in her solemn eyes, and saw that she watched it in his, too. The sound of his voice was as if he hadn't used it for a long while when, with a short, hampered turning of his head, he said, "Good G—d, this is no place to talk about anything." He moved to the door, as if he must leave the best part of himself behind, with her. He was leaving something, surely; something sank down out of him with a slow, mocking glitter, like a silver plate dropped in a pool. If this was a decent thing he did, there was no bravery in it, since he did it like a fool. The only conscious bravery he could effect now, with the bolt shot back and his hand on the doorknob, was to look at her again. Doctor Caligari jumped his forepaws up on Hal's leg; Hal put his hand to the terrier's woolly head and turned.

She stood there with her chin raised a little, as if she had just shaken back the full, glinting richness of her hair—her hands behind her back, one knee bent so that there was a suggestion of her straight leg in the sheen of the satin. The courage of her eyes, watching him, was solemn, deep, and darkly clear; but that very courage added to her air of loneliness. The unshielded light was merciless upon the ill-chosen, worn furnishings around her in the room. And she stood there—straight, beyond common loveliness—and watched him leaving her as if she were sending him away.

"Good night," he said, and it sounded utterly casual.

Her frank lips, which already he couldn't believe had been under his, moved over a "Good night" which he didn't hear. He swung the door open and went out, down into the dark house, past hope of sleep for the confusion into which his thoughts and feelings and desires had been so abruptly tumbled.

CHAPTER V

Friday

Sleep trapped him as that confusion had—without warning. And he woke with a start that nearly slid him off the horsehair sofa. Fresh sunlight blazed into his face through the fern-hung bow-window, and he wasn't sure where he was at all, only that he was wide awake and filled with a fine, sourceless joy for the day and for something that had happened. He lay happily for a moment while the circumstances of his being here found themselves in his head.

First remembering the transport of Barry's sheer loveliness in his arms, he stretched himself luxuriously, a bath of rich content tingling through his body. He snapped off his stretching suddenly to look at his watch, but his wide smile remained. Think of feeling so well at quarter past five.

But what the dickens had been all the trouble last night? All that momentous entanglement with chivalry and speechlessness, just because the break had come before he had expected it? He had done a very sound thing: he had saved himself from a premature enthusiasm that would have mixed up the rest of the trip a good deal; but there was nothing so very momentous about it. It was enough for one evening to see her defenses go down; her trust of him, taken slowly, would be more certain. Five more days coming, at least: it would have been very disappointing to forget the job of chastisement he had to do—go off the deep end at the first drop of the hat that way. Yet there he'd been so off his guard as to make emotional difficulties about leaving her room, as barely to hold himself from charging in against that remark of hers about not loving him. And outside her room, even the sudden, restive creaking of an old house in the dark had...

He got to his feet and breathed deeply, as if the contained, dusty air of the room were that of a mountain pasture in spring. Somewhere in the upper regions an alarm clock went off into its persistent rattle, and there was distant, occasional bumping to stir the slumber of the house. When he came back to the hall he found Kerrigan fumbling at the chains and bolts of the great front door.

"Well, sir—of all people," said Kerrigan, his ruddy, well-scrubbed face held by quiet concern. "A good morning to you. Thought you were lost—probably been locked out."

"I got in late," said Hal, feeling his blandness penetrated by that brown, scholarly look. "She showed me the wrong room; so I slept in there."

"You slept in there?" Kerrigan said curiously.

"Yes," said Hal quickly. "Why?"

"Then that can't be the room the trains run through," said Kerrigan, gratified. "Must be the kitchen. Didn't you hear 'em?"

"No," said Hal, laughing.

"Let me tell you if every train't charged through here was hauling pay load, stocks are a buy at any price. Gad, sir, they were on five-minute headway all night and on their way somewhere. Only trouble, they wasted a lot of steam whistling for the pantry door. If I slept here once more, I could get a dispatcher's job on the division. I only missed the number on one train: that was because I was scared his backwash was going to suck the bedclothes off me. And you slept."

A twinkle grew behind the false moroseness of the brown eyes. "Whose room did she try to stick you in?"

"I don't know," said Hal. "Didn't wait to find out."

Kerrigan watched him an extra instant, then dismissed the last of his concern. "How's your body?" he said.

"Fine," said Hal. "Gosh—well, fine, as I said. How's yours?"

Kerrigan's look was amused and curious. "Like the bottom of a stove."

"And that's how?"

"Grate," said Kerrigan. "Come on, let's go out and have a snort of the ay em."

Hal was up on the widow's walk stowing luggage when Barry came out the door—refreshed, immaculate, fully awake. He watched her look into the new morning, draw a breath of it, then turn and say something smiling and quiet to Sister Anastasia, the rich slick of gold under her hat-brim gleaming. She didn't look for him nor show any trace of consciousness that he might be there, and Hal smiled to himself as he drew an end of the lashing round the rail.

He stayed on the roof purposely until she should get in. She came toward the car without looking up; and when she was close under him at the door, he said, "Hello there," in low pleasure. She glanced at him then, as if she had to see him before she knew who had spoken. "Hello," she said pleasantly, echoed nothing but the same pleasant hello. Then she got in.

Even as his smile widened, Hal's memory hurried back to last night to make certain there was nothing he'd overlooked. It was she who'd made it so serious, her eyes held in alarm, her head carried as if there were something to be brave about. Well, said Hal to himself, ignoring a certain inconclusion about it: I can pretend nothing's happened, too; but you can't make it a fact by pretending, my beauty.

He was about to vault down from the roof when something drew his eyes to the high stoop. Crack stood there, drowsing in his amiable half-dream of something satisfactory and private as he hoped for Hal's look. The golf ball gave a short leap from his idle hand and fell back into it.

"Morning," said Hal, and swung himself to the ground.

"Mornin'," said Crack quietly. "Sleep good?"

"Fine, thanks," said Hal. "You?"

"Fine, thanks," said Crack.

Listen, d—n it, Hal charged himself: there's no special meaning in that tone of his; it's just his way of saying things. "Good," he said aloud, without looking at Crack. If the man did know already by his own device that Hal hadn't slept in a bed, what was there in it to amuse him so shyly?

The river beside the road was flat and leisurely; leisure in the slow little veins and eddies that slid under the overhanging weeds of the bank and leisure in the tall trees that stood still above their own unfocused reflections. They had run along some twenty smooth miles when Barry's voice came low, slow, sure, and Hal listened to the measures of it without especially heeding the words. She said, "That sign said ten miles to Logansport; that might be the very place for breakfast."

Hal thought of her as he had left her last night, head up, hands behind her back, one satin leg a little bent; and he remembered suddenly that she had been crying when he came in. The memory pricked him—like the quick recollection of a promised kindness which it is too late to perform. He pressed the accelerator nearer the floor—possessed by a tentative hurry to see if her expression was clear of the remembered loneliness, to make sure she had nothing to do with the uncertainly hushed sense of something ill that had seemed to travel with them.

They drew up before the shining white-tile luncheon toward which Mrs. Pulsipher had thrown a yelp of hungry approval, and Hal slid out to stand by the door. Barry leaned forward to get up, and Doctor Caligari, held in the crook of her arm, was brought closer to Crack for a moment than he seemed to like; he bared his teeth over an ugly, rising growl. "Doc!" she said in quick censure. Hal took the dog from her. And when he met her eyes, they had in them the hurried end of last night's solemn alarm.

D—n it, I don't want her to take back what she said, Hal told himself inside his closed mouth: I don't want her to be in love with me. All I want is...

COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW OF THE DALY CITY FIRE DEPARTMENT

The first month of the newly organized Fire Department of Daly City has passed, and the way the change was worked out ahead proved very satisfactory, as there was not the slightest confusion or let up in the usual excellent way in which the department functions.

The first Volunteer Company was organized in 1906. Since the inception of the department in that year things have greatly changed. From a group of citizens numbering 30, composing one company, who had to beg or borrow all the equipment they could not buy through giving dances, etc., it has become a department of six auto driven stations each carrying sufficient 2½ inch hose to combat all large fires, and 1½ inch hose for smaller ones. One of the trucks has two chemical tanks, three have one each of chemicals, and one is furnished with a pump and clear water tank to fight smaller indoor fires.

There is also one apparatus that carries hose and fire fighting tools, fitted out as a first aid ambulance, being able to carry two injured persons at one time. The entire twelve men in the First Aid Company have studied and drilled on first aid work until each has passed the National Red Cross examination. Two members from every other station are detailed every year to take this examination, and eventually the entire department will have first aid certificates. Two members have taken higher examinations and carry certificates as first aid instructors.

All male employees of the city are members of the fire department, whether in police, water works or street departments, and in this way a majority of the policemen have also taken up first aid so that they are competent to handle injured persons. While these solutions from one hand drawn hose reel, to the present equipment were taking place, the personnel and methods of fire fighting have also greatly changed. The old timers did excellent work with the equipment they had in early times; they did not have paved streets, excellent flow and pressure of water, nor automatic fire alarm system which helps the present department. We have a large number of these men in the present department who have stayed with the game, adjusted themselves to the new methods of fire fighting and by drilling and studying these new methods are as good as any of the younger members and better than some of them.

While speaking of the old timers it is well to mention that they have a very strong organization known as the Veteran Firemen of Daly City. We will give a review of this organization in the near future. At a recent lecture given by the chief engineer of the National Board of Underwriters, before the Peninsula Chiefs Club, he said the first thing their engineers did in establishing insurance rates was to look into the water system. There are thirty different angles connected with the water supply that are taken into consideration, such as supply, how obtained, stored, pumped, size of mains and how distributed.

Daly City has the distinction of having a better water supply than any town of its size in the state, having three reservoirs with a combined capacity of 3,000,000 gallons and pumps qualified to pump 3900 gallons an hour. A greater part of the city is covered with hydrants from 200 to 300 feet apart all leading from mains ranging in size ten inches to four inches. The height of the reservoirs give a greater pressure at these hydrants than San Francisco allows her engines to pump. This is a great factor in the low insurance rates that the citizens enjoy here. The majority of the city is covered with this high pressure system, except the newly annexed territory known as the Colma district, but steps are now being taken by the City Council to have this remedied in the near future. The second step in establishing the rates is the fire alarm system, whether by phone, ringing of bells or otherwise. Daly City has a well kept, up to date automatic fire alarm system, composed of a central station where all the switchboards, batteries, etc., are taken care of, and two sub stations with three electrical driven sirens, connected up to 30 automatic alarms boxes placed so that it is an easy matter to reach a box in any part of the city except the section referred to in the article about water. The Superintendent of the fire alarm system at the present time is installing a machine in the police chief's office, which when finished, will add much to the efficiency of this system. The next step in the insurance rates is the personnel of the department or the organization. There is an old saying in fire department rules that a department is no better than its officers; in other words, if you have inefficient officers the men will be likewise. The personnel of this department is composed of 75 members, including all male city employees. These have stepped into the new organization without any trouble, owing to the fact that the City Council had studied out the new plan in a thorough manner. All of the members, some of whom were a little doubtful at first, now realize that this is an advancement towards greater efficiency. Some time in the near future there is going to be a new company composed of the city employees which will then leave the personnel composed of 72 men exclusive of the city employees.

Before this change took place the fire department elected their own fire commissioners who in turn appointed the Chief, Assistant Chiefs, Fire Marshal and Secretary, and the companies also elected their members, in this way the City Council had only a supervisory say in the personnel. Under the new ordinance, making it a partly paid fire department, it became a part of the council's duty to make these appointments, as they are responsible to the taxpayers for the disbursement of the public's money. At the present time they have made appointments which seem to have the approval of the men as well as when they selected them themselves. Following is the roster:

Chairman Board of Fire Commissioners, who is also chairman of the Fire Committee of City Council, Paul Selmi; Station No. 1, Larry Shaw; Station No. 2, Emil Forsell; Station No. 3, Joseph Soares; Station No. 4, George Augustein; Station No. 5, George Frelsch; Station No. 6, Anthony Gaggero; Commission Secretary, A. SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: What is the Greek and Roman myth about the origin of the fountain?

Answer: Arethusa was a beautiful wood nymph. This nymph loved to go hunting, and, returning one day heated from the chase, went to bathe in the river. A voice from the depths of the stream startled her and she fled, but the voice followed, saying, "Why flyest thou, Arethusa? Alpheus am I the god of the stream." Faster and faster she ran, but the god pursued her, so Diana changed her into a lovely fountain to save her.

Question: How much does a large elephant weigh and how much weight can he carry?

Answer: A large elephant has been known to weigh as much as 10,000 pounds or ten times as much as the average horse. It can carry about a ton's weight at the rate of four miles an hour, in climates where horses could not be used as beasts of burden.

Question: In Egypt, how large a percentage of the babies of the natives live past their infancy?

Answer: As a result of ignorance and neglect, it is estimated that only ten per cent of the children born to natives there live past their infancy.

Question: What other author than Longfellow had considered writing about Evangeline and Gabriel in connection with the conquest of Acadia?

Answer: Hawthorne had heard the tale of the lovers driven from their homes by the British expulsion order in 1755, and of their long search for each other, which ended only when Gabriel lay on his deathbed. He had considered weaving a novel about it; feeling, however, that it was better suited to poetic treatment, he offered it to Longfellow, who made of it an exquisite idyl.

Question: Is an Eskimo dog ever dangerous?

Answer: A man walking upright would not be attacked unless the dog were at the extremity of hunger, but a fall in the snow, putting him at a disadvantage, might cause the animals to attack him. Eskimo dogs are not affectionate and need to be carefully watched. Those who have knowledge of the habits of these dogs state that they should always be kept within sight of the driver and within reach of a stout hide whip. They can

LESSON SERMON OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

In all Christian Science churches, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., a Lesson-Sermon will be read Sunday, August 11, on the subject "Spirit."

The Golden Text will be: "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6: 8). Bible selections will include the following passage from I Cor. 2: 12, 13: "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual."

Passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will also be included, which read as follows: "The false evidence of material sense contrasts strikingly with the testimony of Spirit. Material sense lifts its voice with the arrogance of reality and says: I am wholly dishonest, and no man knoweth it. . . . Spirit, bearing opposite testimony, saith: I am Spirit. Man, whose senses are spiritual, is my likeness. . . . I am the substance of all, because I AM THAT I AM" (pp. 252, 253).

(By AL GOULD)

The Daly City Tanforan baseball club added another victory to their great record at the Harrison diamond Sunday afternoon, when they decisively defeated the strong Golden State Meat Company club to the tune of 12 to 3.

Masterly pitching by Lola Petrocchi, who proved his superiority in the one and only tight spot he was forced to pull himself from in the fifth inning, and the brilliant base running of Kirby were the features of the contest.

STATE'S NATURAL PARKS LURE CAMPERS

Motorists who wish to pack their own equipment and camp in the more remote areas have a wide selection of state parks to choose from.

Recently opened and one of the most spectacular of the state reserves is "Pfeiffer Redwoods," in the Big Sur District of Monterey County, 31 miles south of Carmel. There are more than a hundred attractive camp sites in the redwoods along the Big Sur River. Horseback riding, swimming and hiking are the principal amusements. The ocean is only a few miles away. Cabins have been erected and there is a dining room. Camps are provided with tables, stoves, running water and rest rooms.

The park is on the Coast highway and may be reached easily in about four hours' drive from the Bay district over fine roads.

Another beautiful state park in the same region is the Point Lobos Reserve, three miles south of Carmel, comprising 336 acres of natural wonders—rocky coast, booming surf, and windswept cypress framing grassy inland slopes. Little has been done here to change nature's handiwork. Work is now in progress to provide picnic areas and camp sites, but the main plan for this park is to preserve it in its natural state.

You may park outside and walk through the area over trails or pay a toll of 50c, covering car and all passengers and drive over the roads.

STATE MOVES TO PRESERVE GAME

New style application blanks for hunting licenses are being distributed by the California Division of Fish and Game. Applicants are required to give information about the number and species of game birds and animals taken by them during the previous season, as well as listing the counties where the bag was made.

This information will benefit the general cause of conservation and help to determine restrictions in certain localities where it is shown that certain species of birds and animals are in danger of extermination. It also will reveal the number of hunters in each county and assist experts of the division in restocking localities where hunting is heaviest.

The new button for hunters is open faced, as are those issued to anglers. The license folds up, is placed in the back of the button, and the name of the applicant, address and description can be readily seen. The division has distributed deer tags to various agencies and hunters are urged to get tags and licenses early.

Residents under 18 pay $1; citizen residents $2; non-residents $10; declarant aliens $10; other aliens $25. Two deer tags are furnished for $1.

AGAIN AWARDED WORLD PREMIER

Again the RKO Golden Gate Theater has been awarded the world premier of an important picture. With stars appearing in person, lights and a capacity attendance, the dynamic Katherine Hepburn on Wednesday made her bow in the title role of Booth Tarkington's prize winning romance, "Alice Adams" and scored a triumph seldom equaled.

"Alice Adams" is a woman's story and tells of the struggle of a young girl to rise above the sordid environment of a small town. Those who saw Katherine Hepburn recreate "Alice Adams" acclaim it the finest performance of her spectacular career.

Fred McMurray, one of the most popular leading men, plays opposite the star. Others in the cast are Fred Stone, Evelyn Venable, Hedda Hopper, Zeffie Tilbury, Charles Grapevin, Frank Albertson and Virginia Howell.

The Golden Gate is also showing a thrilling short subject, "Fijiland," with the exotic dances and thrilling barbaric ceremonies of the natives. On the stage is an elaborate show of RKO vaudeville and the Greater Californians under the baton of Charles Kaley.

COMPREHENSIVE DALY CITY FIRE

The first month of the newly organized Fire Department of Daly City has passed, and the way the change was worked out ahead proved very satisfactory, as there was not the slightest confusion or let up in the usual excellent way in which the department functions.

The first Volunteer Company was organized in 1906. Since the inception of the department in that year things have greatly changed. From a group of citizens numbering 30, composing one company, who had to borrow all the equipment they could not buy through giving dances etc., it has become a department of six auto driven stations each carrying sufficient 2½ inch hose to combat all large fires, and 1½ inch hose for smaller ones. One of the trucks has two chemical tanks, three have one each of chemicals, and one is furnished with a pump and clear water tank to fight smaller indoor fires.

There is also one apparatus that carries hose and fire fighting tools fitted out as a first aid ambulance being able to carry two injured persons at one time. The entire twelve men in the First Aid Company have studied and drilled on first aid work until each has passed the National Red Cross examination. Two members from every other station are detailed every year to take this examination, and eventually the entire department will have first aid certificates. Two members have taken higher examinations and carry certificates as first aid instructors.

All male employees of the city are members of the fire department whether in police, water works or street departments, and in this way a majority of the policemen have also taken up first aid so that they are competent to handle injured persons.

While these solutions from one hand drawn hose reel, to the present equipment were taking place, the personnel and methods of fire fighting have also greatly changed. The old timers did excellent work with the equipment they had in early times they did not have paved streets, excellent flow and pressure of water nor automatic fire alarm system which helps the present department. We have a large number of these men in the present department who have stayed with the game, adjusted them-

Natural That Children Should "Want to Know"

By MRS. NESTOR NOWELL,
National Kindergarten Association,
New York City.

The normal child is always asking questions unless he has been snubbed time after time, for asking them. He comes into a wonderful world. Everything about him is new. Naturally he wants to know what is happening and why. He wants to "see the wheels go round."

"Bobby is always asking questions," says a tired mother. Perhaps if she were to take time to answer a few he would not bother her so much. As a rule, a child will ask a question until he gets an answer. Why should we not make up our minds to this from the start?

I should be alarmed if a child ceased to have an interest in all things around him. A normal, healthy child is bristling with questions. It is by asking them that he grows in understanding. No parent should discourage the question habit.

Of course you should let your child think out certain things for himself, but you must answer some of the questions which lead him toward the solution of his problem.

I cannot remember the time when I did not answer my little girl's questions. A girl can ask as many as a boy. Some of them were real puzzlers. I had to look up the answers in books. I did not pretend to be a goddess, knowing everything. I often said, "I think we shall find the answer to this question in one of our big books," meaning the dictionary or some volume of the encyclopedia.

Mothers must answer questions. It does not hurt any of us to search for the answers, and so continue our education. I consider we can still learn much. We can learn as long as we live.

Children may ask questions at inopportune moments. Generally they do! Then the mother, irritated, often says, "Don't bother me." I used to make it a point, when I could not answer at once, to say, "I will tell you at—" naming the time. I always kept my word. The intelligent child will remind the mother of her promise. She will say, as did my little girl, "Mother, is this the time to answer those questions I asked this morning?" One of us was pretty sure to remember it.

I generally wrote down my daughter's question, if I knew I should need a book to answer it. You will find that a child whose questions are answered thoughtfully at some definite time which the mother may choose will not overwhelm her with too many at once, because she will concentrate on the two or three, the answers to which have been promised.

I do not think it fair for a mother to ignore or to refuse to answer her child's questions. The father is generally away much of the time. The mother is nearly always near the young child, therefore it is she who must reply to questions, to the best of her ability. There are so many wonderful books for mothers nowadays that there is little excuse for not doing so. When one does not answer, perhaps it is sheer laziness. At any rate, a likely result will be that later on, when serious matters come to the child's mind, other persons instead of mother will be questioned, and how surprised and distressed that mother will be when she learns about it.

WEEKLY BULLETIN

By Chief A. P. Chesney

The Board of Councilmen, at the request of the Daly City Recreation and Improvement Club, have called an election to be held on August 24 to see if the citizens will grant the board permission to raise and spend a sum not to exceed $35,000.

The club has suggested a plan to the board to raise this amount by special direct tax, to be paid in one year, in that way doing away with ten year payments, plus the interest for the ten years.

If the people of Daly City decide by a majority vote that the board is authorized to raise and spend this sum it will mean that Daly City will be in a position to request the federal government to make a grant of approximately $80,000.

This money is being paid out to the different states, countries, cities and towns and will eventually have to be paid back by the people of the United States, whether they have received any of it for their particular district or not, so to any citizen that has the welfare of his community at heart the thought comes that they may as well get some improvements in their town as well as employment for their unemployed.

The improvements desired in Daly City are in eight projects, all of vital interest to the people of the community. These follow:

Additions to or the erection of a new library building. The present library was built seventeen years ago and at that time served its purpose well, but is totally inadequate for the business transacted at the present time owing to the increased population.

Acquiring the Vista Grande school building (which is to be replaced by a new structure) and making changes therein to turn the building into a community center. At the present time there is no place for the assembly of the different organizations in Daly City. Only two weeks ago there were four meetings all trying to be held at one time in the City Hall, which is already crowded with the necessary city offices.

Construction of a building in Daly City Park to be used as an auditorium and other improvements there. This is badly needed in Daly City, as there is no place at present where the different organizations can hold any affair such as dances, etc. The building would be an asset to the City as it could be rented out for these affairs.

Providing equipment for Daly City Park for recreation and play grounds. Daly City is badly in need of such a place as this for baseball and other recreations.

Repairs and additions to the City Hall, this is sadly needed; the present hall was built in 1914 and was plenty large enough at that time, but is totally inadequate for the transaction of the city's business at the present time.

Repairs and renovations of the fire-houses. Some of these buildings were erected years ago by the members of the department and have never cost Daly City any money whatever, and are very much in need of repairs at the present time.

Erection of a new jail. A large majority of us think that if people behaved themselves they would not have to go to jail, so why give them a new jail; nevertheless, it is a necessary evil and we must have a jail, and the one in use is against all humane laws in regard to safety, health and danger of fire in a frame building.

Extension of the water mains and fire alarm system into the newly annexed district in the southern end of the city.

Daly City at the present time has one of the finest water supplies of any town of its size. It is supplying all of the homes, stores etc., in the city outside of this district and still has a large surplus of water available for new customers, which would be good business for Daly City.

The extension of the fire alarm system means added protection and lower insurance rates for the people in this district who have been paying taxes for a number of years and are entitled to some public service; the tax that would be paid in this district would more than pay for the extension of both water and fire alarm system.

After reading the above, if there is any doubt in any citizen's mind in regard to any of these projects, they can obtain further information by attending the meetings held by the Daly City Recreation and Improvement Club in the City Hall. Go to the polls on August 24 and vote "YES" to help improve your city as well as giving employment to the unemployed.

There have been some misleading figures published in the various San Francisco papers, either by mistake or intentionally. Pay no attention to these articles and come to the meetings and get your information first hand.

FLOWER FESTIVAL CONTEST TO OPEN

Hugh Barrett Dobbs, famous as "Captain Dobbsie" of the radio, will be director in chief of the "Queen Contest," which will be one of the features of the San Mateo Products and Floral Fiesta, it was announced yesterday by the executive committee in charge of the affair.

The contest will be for the honored title of Queen Flora, who will reign over the three-day show to be held at Bay Meadows on October 11, 12 and 13. In addition to the honor, the successful candidates will be given a trip to the San Diego Fair, with all expenses paid.

San Mateo County has been divided into eleven districts—Daly City being designated as the First District—and an individual contest will be staged in each of them. The most popular girl in each district will be named Queen of her locality, and the eleven so chosen will be guests of the official San Mateo County delegation to the San Diego Exposition during San Mateo County Day there.

Then, from the eleven fair ones, the individual girl receiving the most votes will have the honor of being crowned "Queen Flora," and the ten other district queens will form her court. A diamond ring will be presented to the Fiesta Queen.

A nomination coupon will be printed in this paper later, and all details and rules for the contest may be obtained by addressing the Festival headquarters at 116 B street, San Mateo.

DOLORES DEL RIO AT LOCAL HOUSE

Coming Attraction Replete With Big Dancing And Singing Numbers

"In Caliente," First National's latest musical offering with Dolores Del Rio and Pat O'Brien in the stellar roles has been booked for the Daly City Theatre beginning Sunday, for three days—Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, August 11, 12 and 13. Busby Berkeley, famous creator of screen spectacles, has staged three big song and dance numbers entitled "In Caliente," "Lady In Red," and "Muchacha." In the latter number Phil Regan as a bandit chief, does the singing while Dolores Del Rio is featured in a dancing review.

Pat O'Brien portrays an ultra sophisticated magazine editor who is brilliant, but inebriated a large part of the time. He gets mixed up with a chiseling blonde, so his employer kidnaps him and takes him to Caliente to try to sober him up.

There he meets Miss Del Rio, in the role of a famous dancer, and falls for both herself and her dancing, forgetting that he had once written a vicious review about the girl.

Specialty numbers are given by the famous DeMarecos and The Canova Family, who have important parts in the picture.

The second attraction is "Charlie Chan In Egypt," with Warner Oland and Pat Patterson.

Mr. and Mrs. William P. Bolger of Risel street, accompanied by Mrs. Inez Freeman of Anza street, San Francisco, motored to Sonoma Monday of this week and they visited with relatives, returning home Tuesday evening. BOARD OVERRIDES STATE BY VOTING FUNDS FOR NEEDY and permission to expend the money must be sought in September if the Wright act becomes effective and is not held up by referendum.

In voting the $50,000 cash to the livestock project, the board had the assurance from C. H. Sooy, president of Agricultural District 1-A, that San Mateo County will control the labor on the $1,500,000 development. This assurance is given by PWA rules, Sooy said. J. F. Cambiano, union agent, said that San Mateo County labor was satisfied with the agreement.

Work on the project is expected to get underway "within the week," Sooy said.

The board secured an agreement from Sooy that if anything should happen so that the livestock pavilion is not built, San Mateo County's $50,000 would be repaid.

San Mateo County's $50,000 will be used in preparing the land, in building a spur, in removing a power line, and in other preliminary work getting ready for the livestock buildings, funds for which will come from San Francisco, state and federal sources.

The $50,000 was unanimously approved by the board, as the project is looked upon as part of the county's work relief program. Supervisor Albert Witt of Daly City, put the motion for its approval.

Supervisor Witt, declaring that the needy, sick, and old age applicants must be cared for and "that no one must be allowed to suffer," put the motion overriding the state's refusal to allow the $140,000 in special relief items.

"I propose that we place this money in the budget regardless of what the state board has to say," Witt declared.
